STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

Liberal thinking and human rights law recognize minority rights. Thus far, majority groups have not been granted similar rights because it is assumed that they are not vulnerable groups. The majority is presumed to be able to “take care of itself”; it can use its numerical advantage to perpetuate its political power and socio-cultural interests.

Tensions between minority and majority rights are among the most pressing issues of our time. The changing patterns in global migration reconfigure the cultural landscape of societies and shift the dynamics between cultural groups within the state. On one side, the backlash against multiculturalism and the reemergence of majority nationalism raise new concerns over the tyranny of the majority. On the other side, fears over the erosion of majority groups’ culture appear due to the accelerated pace of migration and the creation of new minorities. All these challenges call for the reexamination of fundamental assumptions in law and theory.

The conference seeks to understand better the intercultural tensions between majority and minority rights, the reflection of these tensions in law and policy, moral and legal challenges they pose to theories of democracy, diversity and justice, and their normative consequences. What are the vulnerabilities that minorities and majorities face in contemporary societies? Can minority rights and majority rights be asserted based on similar rationales? How do distinctive political contexts and histories influence the legal responses that shape minority and majority rights? Which policies act as barriers against cultural group rights?

The conference will open with a Keynote Address by Will Kymlicka on April 25 at 16:00 at the WZB Berlin. Regular and poster session presenters are requested to submit a paper two weeks before the workshop (no later than April 8), so that we can distribute it in advance. Participants to the panel discussions do not need to submit a paper in advance but may do so if they wish. For regular sessions, each talk will be 40 minutes in total: 20 minutes presentation and 20 minutes Q&A. Presenters in the one-hour parallel poster session should prepare a poster on the basis of their paper. From the contributions to all sessions, we aim at publishing 12 selected papers, based on a peer review process, as an edited volume with one of the leading publishers (there is no publication requirement, however). More details about it will be discussed in Berlin.
